The Secret Of Successful Learning

Educational Ebooks
Everyone faces challenges during their school life. Whether they are because of fellow students, academic pressure, or high expectations, we have all been there. In order to overcome these challenges, we must learn to put up a fight. This fight can only be won by the collective effort of three parties; parents, students, and teachers. Successful learning cannot be achieved if parents are unsupportive or if teachers do not nurture their students properly. Problems like bullying, lack of motivation, laziness or academic pressure can be tackled if we understand the root of the problem. And those problems do have a single source. So which of these issues contributed to your inner struggles throughout your school years? What is the root of the problem?

The Secret of Our Success
How Culture Is Driving Human Evolution, Domesticating Our Species, and Making Us Smarter

Princeton University Press How our collective intelligence has helped us to evolve and prosper Humans are a puzzling species. On the one hand, we struggle to survive on our own in the wild, often failing to overcome even basic challenges, like obtaining food, building shelters, or avoiding predators. On the other hand, human groups have produced ingenious technologies, sophisticated languages, and complex institutions that have permitted us to successfully expand into a vast range of diverse environments. Humans are a puzzling species. On the one hand, we struggle to survive on our own in the wild, often failing to overcome even basic challenges, like obtaining food, building shelters, or avoiding predators. On the other hand, human groups have produced ingenious technologies, sophisticated languages, and complex institutions that have permitted us to successfully expand into a vast range of diverse environments. What has enabled us to dominate the globe, more than any other species, while remaining virtually helpless as lone individuals? This book shows that the secret of our success lies not in our innate intelligence, but in our collective brains—on the ability of humans to socially interconnect and learn from one another over generations. Drawing insights from lost European explorers, clever chimpanzees, mobile hunter-gatherers, neuroscientists and the human genome, Joseph Henrich demonstrates how our collective brains have propelled our species' genetic evolution and shaped our biology. Our early capacities for learning from others produced many cultural innovations, such as fire, cooking, water containers, plant knowledge, and projectile weapons, which in turn drove the expansion of our brains and altered our physiology, anatomy, and psychology in crucial ways. Later on, some collective brains generated and recombined powerful concepts, such as the lever, wheel, screw, and writing, while also creating the institutions that continue to alter our motivations and desires. Henrich shows how our genetics and biology are inextricably interwoven with cultural evolution, and how culture-gene interactions launched our species on an extraordinary evolutionary trajectory. Tracking clues from our ancient past to the present, The Secret of Our Success explores how the evolution of both our cultural and social natures produce a collective intelligence that explains both our species' immense success and the origins of human uniqueness.

Well then, educate us!
The secret of successful education

Tredition GmbH
“Knowledge without education is a sword in the hands of a madman” (D. I. Mendeleev.) This statement is worthy of attention. But what is actually the education? For centuries, children were abused to be the objects of politics and economy. They were trained to conform to the expectations of older and more powerful people. Their spirits were crushed, regardless of whether the society paid homage to capitalism or communism. Today’s reality is no different from the past: the powerful educates the powerless, the permissiveness prevails nowadays, there is the education of “letting everything happen” as the birth of “liberation from the apparatuses of power” and many other things. Systems are still afraid to create people who are confident, creative and determined to implement new ideas and gradually change the world, and therefore the system. But these are the kinds of people we need to meet the challenges of the future. Modern education is not an academic experiment on a subject; it must begin with a question, how the adolescents tick according to their age, what are their needs, hopes and wishes? We need people, who enjoy learning, finding and solving problems, creative weirdos, who learn to master confidently what they need in life. It is no longer a matter of pouring knowledge into somebody’s head, but of understanding and being able to apply the right knowledge in the right place in its context and its effect. This requires a new approach to education, based not just on educating parents and teachers, but on smart, experienced and above all reliable companions for teenagers. In this book you can read about what education was, is and can be.

The Formula
Unlocking the Secrets to Raising Highly Successful Children

BenBella Books
We all want our children to reach their fullest potential—to be smart and well adjusted, and to make a difference in the world. We wonder why, for some people, success seems to come so naturally. Could the secret be how they were parented? This book unveils how parenting helped shape some of the most fascinating people you will ever encounter, by doing things that almost any parent can do. You don’t have to be wealthy or influential to ensure your child reaches their greatest potential. What you do need is commitment—and the strategies outlined in this book. In The Formula: Unlocking the Secrets to Raising Highly Successful Children, Harvard economist Ronald Ferguson, named in a New York Times profile as the foremost expert on the US educational “achievement gap,” along with a world-leading journalist Tatsha Robertson, reveal an intriguing blueprint for helping children from all types of backgrounds become successful adults. Informed by hundreds of interviews, the book includes never-before-published insights from the “How I Was Parented Project” at Harvard University, which draws on the varying life experiences of 220 Harvard students. Ferguson and Robertson have isolated a pattern with eight roles of the “Master Parent” that make up The Formula: the Early Learning Partner, the Flight Engineer, the Fixer, the Revealer, the Philosopher, the Model, the Negotiator, and the GPS Navigational Voice. The Formula combines the latest scientific research on child development, learning, and brain growth and illustrates with life stories of extraordinary individuals—from the Harvard-educated Ghanaian entrepreneur who, as the young child of a rural doctor, was welcomed in his father’s secretive late-night political meetings; to the nation’s youngest state-wide elected official, whose hardworking father taught him math and science during grueling days on the family farm in Kentucky; to the Dreamer immigration lawyer whose low-wage mother pawned her wedding ring to buy her academically outstanding child a special flute. The Formula reveals strategies on how you—regardless of race, class, or background—can help your children become the best they can be and shows ways to maximize their chances for happy and purposeful lives.

Educate 1-To-1
The Secret to Successful Planning, Implementing and Sustaining Change Through Mobile Learning in Schools

Educate 1-to-1 is a book that brings together five veterans of mobile learning in order that their overlapping expertise and experience can help other schools. It aims to simplify, demystify and make it just plain easier to achieve the impact they have seen in their institutions through the discerning application of 1-to-1. According to BESA’s 2013 report, 57% of Primaries and 75% of Secondaries plan on implementing a one-device-per-child strategy in the next few years and for all of them, the difference between success and failure will be the quality of advice they have access to. Mobile learning, deployed in a 1-to-1 model, can have an enormous impact on learning and teaching in a range of contexts, but only if designed and implemented well: “This book is about technology leadership, leadership that is eternally grounded in what we know about effective learning and teaching, with the skepticism required to apply technology only where it accelerates, deepens, adds value or makes the previously impossible possible.” Adam Webster “Successful technology projects in schools almost always rest on the quality of leadership and implementation (including training), and almost never on the quality of the technology.” Dominic Norrish The book explores how technology can improve well-understood educational processes: “The perfect workflow should provide a seamless pathway between student and teacher that enables feedback and progress to be meaningful, effective and rapid.” Daniel Edwards “By zooming in on the different learning affordances, rather than applying a wide lens that tends to view technology as a separate entity and not an intrinsic aspect of teaching and learning today, we can begin to identify proven strategies that help us draw a route map for the integration of mobile technology into the daily business of teaching and learning, thus maximising its potential in education.” José Picard
